

CRAWFORD'S

ST. LOUIS' GREATEST STORE
CITY OF SIGHTS
SIXTH STREET AND WASHINGTON AVENUE.

taken! The season is fast gliding away! Stocks are unsold which MUST BE SOLD! The question of profit will be no longer considered! During the idle days Mr. Crawford and his department buyers have gone through and re-marked all this season's goods in every department, squeezing down prices to such a paralyzing pitch as will stir up this great city from its center to its circumference! These reductions tell the true and correct story!

A Raid on Shoe Makers.

We Can Shoe the World, and Beat All Creation in the Doing of It!

Our shoe buyer, Mr. Moore, was let loose the other day with 20,000 dollars' worth of New York exchange in his jeans and instructions to scour the shoe manufacturing districts of the United States, and to buy up and pay for all good odd lots of this season's shoes he could find at a price not higher than 50c on the dollar, paying cash on the nail for the stuff, and when he ran short of funds to draw upon us for any amount!! (no limit). How well he has succeeded his purchases will speak for themselves in the morning!! MR. MOORE HAS CROWNED HIMSELF WITH GLORY, AND THE "OLD MAN" HAS CROWNED HIM WITH A 20 PER CENT INCREASE in his salary for his nerve, his judgment and his push!! Mr. Moore is the buyer of shoes at our store for the express purpose of doing the largest retail shoe business in St. Louis, and MR. CRAWFORD pledges his word he will do it, or he is going to know the reason why!! Read now the most interesting part of our shoe story!!

HORSE-RACING'S EARLY START HERE.

St. Louis History of the Sport.

Horse racing has an interesting story in this city, as there is probably no other city in the country which has seen a greater variety of the sport or furnished more liberal support to it than St. Louis. Racing first came into prominence here about 1870, and its history since then has been practically continuous, although there have been a few short periods when business stagnation or other causes resulted in the cessation of the sport.

The feature which stands out most prominently in connection with horse racing in this locality is the prominence of the persons who have been identified with the reputable tracks. The promoters of the better class of tracks have almost invariably come from the oldest families in St. Louis, and the sport has in consequence possessed an importance which does not belong to it everywhere. Even in New York, now the center of the American turf, where racing is rapidly becoming the most aristocratic sport, the proportion of the best families represented among its patrons is not as great as in this city.

St. Louis has had, however, its disreputable race tracks as well as its high-class ones. This fact brings out and emphasizes another feature connected with racing in this city—that the support given to it has been more liberal than in any other place in the country. The outlaw tracks which flourished here for many winters were a great drain on the pockets of the community, and it is only in a city where the interest taken in the sport was genuine and free from much of the gambling spirit which often predominates that it would be possible for horse racing to still be in so healthy condition as it is now.

The first races in this neighborhood were run about 115 years ago on the prairie adjoining the St. Louis settlement, then a very small town. A quarter-mile course was laid out on the prairie, and contests of speed between the ponies of the Indians and of the white settlers here became quite a feature of the trading days. For many years they were a recognized form of amusement and also a medium of gambling, although the bets were in the form of wagers of certain amounts of property, such as furs, or the ponies which ran, instead of money. The races, so far as is known, were all quarter-mile dashes, as this distance was the best adapted to the sharp burst of speed exacted from the ponies. Racing flourished so long as the contests were confined to ponies, but when the white settlers began to get a better class of horses from the East and commenced sweeping the Indians out of the field, they withdrew from the contests, although they bet on them more enthusiastically than ever. With this decadence of the Indian wagers between the owners of the horses

White, and it was confidently expected that the would carry on the sport as long as a hope which was deemed to displace that number of horses, afterwards shining lights of the turf started on the same day among the number being Basil Duke and Alden, owned by Benjamin Jayne. On the same course the celebrated match race between the Duke and the Duke, which was the last of the best jockeys of the day.
